Amendments providing for compulsory secret ballots in trade union affairs have already been tabled by three larged by the conservative back benchers on the committee examining the Bill, and the Employment Secretary said he was listening very carefully to what they were saying.

The Employment Secretary is reluctant to legislate on the internal affairs of trade unions on the grounds that i would give them an ideal opportunity (carefully ex-cluded from current legis-

He advised the Conservative faithful at Harrogate: "Most strikes in this country are not those we read about in the newspapers. They are those that flare up and do not last long. listen to the Labour Party sceptical majority to vote until its commitment to democratic methods and ends was made plain, Mr Peter Shore said yesterday. In the strongest of several self-critical weekend speeches by Labour's parliamentary leaders, analysing the party's failure in the Glasgow, Hillhead, by-election last week, Mr. Shore called on the party to pull itself together.

The Hillhead result offered no crumb of comfort for Labour, withich had made a maximum effort and been repulsed: they must not explain away the defeat baut urgently draw the lessons.

To persuacing the slightly sceptical majority to vote that a blurred and inaccurate picture of contemporary Britain which had given rise to "the stain a sceptical majority bard in accurate picture of contemporary Britain which had given rise to "the sample of contemporary Britain which had given rise to "the revival of old-har labour," Mr. Shore derided the perception of class relationships of too many in the party, who saw Britain as laving a structure in which the majority was still denied all rights, oppressed by a nearly omnipotem ruling class and awaiting only the call for a liberation struggle.

That was a picture closer to the 1840s or even the 1920s

Mr Shore, shadow Chancellor of the Exchequer, Chancellor of the Exchequer, speaking to a meeting in Worthing, Sussex, of the Labour Solidarity campaign of which he is joint chairman, said there was a great exercise in democratic persuasion to be undertaken. Many aspects of Labour's policies, were electorally attractive, but the party was not.

Rebutting arguments used repeatedly by members of the Trostskyne Militant Tend-Trostskyne Militant Tendency, and most notably in a speech this month by Mr Pat Wedgwood Benn's defence of Wall, who is seeking nomination as Labour parliamentary candidate for Bradford that have candidate for Bradford that Marxist thought had had North, Mr Shore said that those who claimed that any socialist government would face violent counter-revolution knew nothing of the history of this country, had no respect for the mass of its citizens, were openly contemptoous of political democracy and had no place inside the Labour Party.

Mr Shore turned to Mr Wedgwood Benn's defence of the place of Marxism in the Labour Party. He accepted that Marxist thought had had an important place in the party. But what had never been acceptable to democratic socialism in Britain was Marxism-Leninism, the theory of an elite vanguard designed to impose dictatorship of the proletariat.

Quoting a recent speech of Mr Benn's, he added: "Those

And so they probably will be — perhaps with death though Bahrain's Minister of Information goes to some lengths to emphasize that the Khalifa Government is a tolerant regime which will always consider mercy.

A far more sensitive issue for the Bahrainis, however, is the patently obvious—even brazen—involvement of Iran in the planned coup. It is primarily for this reason that the trial of the 73 men, which resumed this weekend, has been held largely in setret. Journalists are politely but firmly barred from the proceedings.

Computer setting for 'The Times'

The Times' editorial pages have been entirely set by computer today for the first time. The Times is the first broadsheet national daily newspaper to have gone over to computer setting.

The first page was set by computer on March 15, 1981, shortly after the newspaper was bought by Mr Rupert Murdoch. Over the last 12 months an increasing number of pages have gone over to the new process.

Printers feed reporters' copy into a computer which then produces columns of type. They are pasted up and photographed to produce a polymer plate from which a printing plate is made.

Mr Tony Norbury, execu-tive production editor, said yesterday: "It is a considerable achievement to have converted the whole of The Times editorial in just over a year without losing an edition".

The classified advertising section of the paper is due for conversion to computer setting by the end of April.

No way round writ irregularity

Bernstein and Another v Jackson and Another Before Lord Justice Dunn and Lord Justice Slade

[Judgment delivered March 19]

An irregularity in procedure caused by the non-renewal of a writ was not one which could be cured by invoking the provisions of Order 2, rule 1 of the Rules of the Supreme Court. The extension and renewal of a writ was governed exclusively by Order 6, applied to st.

sion and renewal of a writ was governed exclusively by Order 6, rule 8.

The Court of Appeal so held in allowing an appeal by the first delendant, Mrs. Maureen Jackson, from an order made by Mr Justice Lawson in chambers in Leeds District Registry. The first defendant and the plaintiffs, Mr Gilles Bernstein and Mr Stanley Caminsky, were residents of South Africa.

The plaintiffs had obtained judgment for 6,000 rands against the first defendant in South Africa in May 1977. That judgment had not yet been paid.

The first defendant had £3,000 on deposit with the Leeds Permanent Building Society which she had agreed to transfer to the plaintiffs in satisfaction of the South African judgment. That money was never transferred. On December 7, 1977 the plaintiffs issued a writ in England claiming the £3,000 and the building society was joined as second defendant.

On January 6, 1978 the registrar gave the plaintiffs leave to serve a notice of the writ out of the jurisdiction but attempts to serve the notice failed.

On December 7, 1977 the time to serve the notice failed.

On December 7, 1978 the time for service of the writ expired. No application was made to renew it.

The first defendant returned to England in 1978. On January 28, 1981 the registrar, on the plaintiffs' application, made an order for substituted service of the notice of the writ on the first defendant to be effected by post at the office of the second defendant's solicitors in Leeds.

Service in that manner was effected and the proceedings were handed to the first defendant. She did not acknowledge service or effect an appearance and in May 1981 judgment in default was signed against her.

In July 1981 the first defendant applied to set aside the order for substituted service of the notice of the writ and the judgment in default for irregularity. She also applied to strike out the action. The registrar adjourned the matter to the judge.

The judge held that the irregularity relied on, the non-renewal of the writ, was one which he had jurisdiction to deal with under Order 2, rule 1.

He set aside the judgment and further, ordered that the first further, ordered that the first defendant be given leave to defend the plaintiffs' action on condition that an acknowledg-ment of service or appearance was filed within 14 days.

Mr Gerald Lumley for the first defendant; Mr John M. Collins for the plaintiffs. LORD JUSTICE DUNN said that Mr Lumley submitted that the case was not the one which fell within Order 2, rule 1. Alternatively, if it was, the judge should not have exercised his discretion under the rule.

The power to renew writs was contained in Order 6, rule 8. Accordingly, the writ was not Accordingly, the writ was not valid for service after December 6, 1978 which was 12 months after the date of issue. Moreover, no application had been made to renew it and even if that had been made the judge could not extend the validity for more than 12 months from December 6, 1978. While conceding that failure to extend the writ and the impossi-bilty of extension did not render the writ null and void, he contended that it was invalid for service.

Service, by his order, the Furthermore, by his order, the judge had in fact obliged the first defendant to waive the irregularity which would have been open to her to take if the writ had been served upon her. Although the order for substituted service was a mere irregularity it was not the kind intended to be covered by Order 2, rule 1.

The court had a wide discretion under that rule, but the discretion had to be operated with a proper regard to the rest of the rules. In particular, the rule had never been used to circumvent under that rule, but the dis-cretion had to be operated with a proper regard to the rest of the rules. In particular, the rule had never been used to circumvent the provisions of Order 6, rule 8. Mr Lumley submitted that Mr Lumley submitted that what had happened in the present case was not a mere technicality or slip or mistaken step because the renewal of a writ was a fundamental step in proceedings provision for which was governed exclusively by Order 6, rule 8.

Mr Collins, for the plaintiffs, submitted that although a writer.

which had not been renewed was not valid for service, which he accepted, the same did not apply to the notice of the writ and that nothing in the rules indicated that such a notice was not valid for service. for service. He said that if he was wrong about that, wonetheless the failure to renew the writ was an irregularity which could be cured in the discretion of the judge under Order 2, rule 1.

He submitted that the judge was quite right to exercise his discretion in the way which he had done and that there was no prejudice to the first defendant because she was able to put forward a defence on the merits; if she had one. On the other hand there would be prejudice to the plaintiffs who had been kept out of money to which they were entitled for a long time and it would add to long time and it would and to costs to strike the action out because new proceedings could be issued again as the period of limitation had not yet expired. Therefore, the judge was right to allow the action to go ahead and 8 provided a compendious code for the extension and renewal of writs which was not the type of irregularity which was envisage could be dealt with by Order could be dealt with by Order 4, rule 1.

Even assuming that ther could be done, in his Lordship's view, the irregularity in the present case was such a fundamental defect in procedure that the judge should not have exercised his discretion under Order 2, rule 1. Accordingly the appeal would be allowed and the writ and order for substituted service set aside

The Fire Brigades Union believes that many of the failures in both fires are repeated almost every day in the country's 63 brigades. The Health and Safety Executive declined a union request to massecute the man.

Mr Ronald Bullers, Lon-don's Chief Fire Officer, has been recommended in the Brigade Report also to consider a new regulation to prevent operational failings not at present covered by existing regulations.

These include new procedures for ordering roll calls during fires to ensure calls during fires to ensure that firemen are not missing; for all fireman to be accompanied when they enter a burning building; and for senior officers who arrived without being ordered to a fire to notify control rooms. The Fire Brigades Union also claims that the death of Fireman Marshall underlines their contention for 10 years their contention for 10 years that no fireman should be allowed to enter a burning building without breathing apparatus. If Fireman Marshall had been wearing such apparatus, his whereabouts would have been recorded by a control officer. The apparatus would also have contained a distrell signal unic.

After Tooting, the Union also proposed improved search and rescue drills because of the 10 minutes it took two fresh breathing apparatus crews to find Fireman Trussell in a building, which was only 15 metres by six although it was cluttered with hospital equipment. Local union officials also want a minimum of five councils. Lord Scarman, as many have done befoe him, advised community relations councils not to become merely spokesmen for minority groups but be prepared to speak to them as well. They had to bridge the generation gap and invole the young so that they are not left to the age old British stratagy of rioting.

Lord Scarman said the police had to be accountable and they should consult before mounting operations against street crime.

was disclosed on Saturday that Commander Brian Fair-bairn, head of L division, which includes Brixton, has agreed to terms of reference or the new police consultative committee in Brixton which say that he will consult the committee on general matters of policing policy and operations.

The terms of reference add: "Save in exceptional cases the commander will give prior notice of his intention to mount major police operations. On those occasions, when circumstances do not permit prior to be given, the commander may be required to account retrospectively to the committee for the particular types of operation mounted."

It is understood that Commander Fairbairn did not want the police to be forced to consult on general matters of policing policy and oper-ations, and wanted to keep some discretion.

Lord Scarman told the community relations council they must ensure the police consultative committees did not become talking shops.

Councillors face surcharge and ban

By David Walker

A civil servant will seek today to have a group of Labour councillors found guilty of spending public money illegally in a court case sure to evoke comparison with Clay Cross, the Derbyshire local authority that unsuccessfully tried to defy Mr Edward Heath's Covernment in 1972 Government in 1972. The district auditor, an official of the Department of the Environment, is asking the Divisional Court to de-clare that Camden borough council in London entered items in its accounts for 1978-79 contrary to law. If he wins, the court will have to decide whether to surcharge and ban from public office 31: Labour members. They in-clude Mr Kenneth Living-stone, leader of the Greater London Council, who was' formerly active in Camden politics.

TALKS ON CONTEMPT LAW TODAY

By a Staff Reporter

An amendment will be discussed in the Lords today to try to change the law on contempt of court after the Harriet Harman case in which the Lord to the law which the Law Lords ruled that documents read aloud in open court were confidential.

The prosposed change in the law, which has been tabled by Lord Gifford and Lady Jeger and is supported by Lord Gardiner, the former Labour Lord Chancellor, among others, marks the start of a campaign by the National Council for Civil Liberties for a change.
The amendment has the support of such organiza-tions as the TUC, the National Union of Journal-ists, the Campaign for Press Freedom and the parliamentary Labour Party and is in line with Lord Scarman's ruling in the Harman case.

The Law Lords ruled three to two that it was contempt of court for a solicitor, in this case Miss Harman, the NCCL's legal officer, to show documents which has been read out in court to a journalist.

Lord Scarman and Lord Simon disagreed. Lord Scarman also suggested that the Law Lords' ruling would be in breach of the European Convention on Human Rights, which lays down requirements for press free-dom Provincial Building Society

These are: creating an economic climate to attract investment and to resolve the unemployment problem; defining economic and commer-cial relationships with the United States and Japan; and developing the European Monetary System (EMS).

Present policies are inad-equate to produce more jobs, the paper says, and M Ortoli will be asking the summit to agree the need for cordination action which can be worked out by the Com-mission in time for the next European Council in June.

Employment measures suggested are: A youth scheme which over the next five years would give training to every community young-ster under the age of 18; cuts in employers' contributions to encourage recruitment and regional and social fund money to help small-and medium-sized businesses as will as co-operatives.

One suggestion in which Mrs Thatcher is expected to take considerable interest is that there should be greater Community interest in co ordinating high technology research. Given West German reticence, there is little chance of making any real progress on institutionalizing the EMS and in turn this will make it diffucult for the summit to do more than repeat its concern about the continuing high level of American interest rates.

The most fruitful discussions of all are likely to take place on the political coperation level, when the meeting turns away from the nitty-gritty of Europe's economic problems and looks at the difficulties in the Middle East, Central America, Turkey and Poland.
Despite M Ortoli's gloomy paper, it is certain that the jubilee summit will conclude that after 25 years of working rather badly together the Community has become one of the better places on Earth even for the unemployed.

Tonight, in a fanfare of William Walton stayed nearly years. Oldham receded. In his attic room he sat and wrote the pieces that were to make his Walton music sounding out in churches, concert rooms and halls, the British musical world will be honouring its most loved and respected composer on his 80th birthday. His father was scronnger and scrounge I did a choir master and singing for quite a time".) Certainly the Sitwells were not best pleased when Walton was taken up by Lady Winborne, London's fore-most hostess, and their friendship suffered.

Walton's music, however, did not. Alice Winborne made him work. "I found the task terrifying," says Walton. "You always felt you had to do your best for Olivier. But he was marvellous to for work for." Walton's life, anyway, was set for a change. Alice Winborne died in 1948, Henry VIII.

If luck intervened then, it was in the form of the Situell family. In 1919, Walton, a reluctant scholar; met Sacheve.

Ance-windorne died in 1948, and the British musical world was beginning to exact duties from its favoured composer. Walton needed to escape with the Berthaming.

On a visit for the Performing Right Society to Argentina he met Susana Gil Passo; daughter of a Buenos Aires businessman. ("Another case of luck.") She was 26 years younger and totally unmusical — "My real virtue", she says. He married her and brought her back with him, not to the London of the Sitwells and Façade, but to Italy. Sachie had introduced him to Amalfi; Alice Winborne had taken him to Ravello.

In between they laid down a veritable Eden: lily ponds, fountains, a Mexican tropical bed, a rock garden, a patch of rare ferns, all supervised by Lady Walton, mulched and hoed by two gardeners. From his musical travels, often conducting his own work, Walton sent back plants. He also installed a pool, set in an olive grove high above the sea. It is no suprise that the Waltons rarely leave it, even if changed musically in 60 years; in the last few years the life has sometimes been lonely. Walton precisely the point about him: spends much of his time in his sound-proofed studio, at work, or listening (on the hi-fi bought friends for his seventieth birthday) to music, cither romantic Italian operas or the work of contemporaries to know what they are doing.

Lady Walton shops, gardens or sits at the third and final panel of a remarkable tapestry, a four-metre long copy of a sixteenth century canvas of the vanished stately home of Stoke Edith, complete with small dogs, fountains and courting couples.

For all his self-imposed foreign exile, Walton is still, to the British public, the most English of composers, as loved for the great vibrant chords of his celebratory marches as for tiny funicular to carry guests the mixture of astringency, up the cliff to the swimming rhythmic suppleness and in-marking of "nobilmente Walton directed his tense romanticism of his orchestral music. Critics have said that Walton has not changed musically in 60 years; precisely the point about him: he has not felt the need to change. Ahead of his time in the Twenties with Portsmouth Point and Façade — when he burst, as one musician put it, on the world with "all the champagne fizz of a Poulenc in Paris" - he has simply gone on writing his own music at his own pace ever since.

All of it bears his own particular mark. "People are quick to look for musical influences", says Alan Frank, for years his musical publisher at Oxford University Press...
"But you have to be careful with Walton. You can say Elgar, Sibelius or Prokofiev but then discover that he had not even heard much of their music when he was first writing."

It has not always been a smooth musical path. Walton, whose early choral training gave him a lasting love for church music, also wanted to write opera. His first, Troilus and Cressida opened in 1954 to a bad start: at the Scala in Milan it was hissed, and in London, Sir Malcoln Sargent, conducting at Covent Garden, had not attended enough re-hearsals. Its reception was not warm.

Later, Walton wrote a second, short, opera called The Bear. Though well-liked it has not been greeted as the small masterpiece some critics be-lieve it to be, and Walton has not written another. "I cannot find a librettist", he says. "It takes such a long time to write an opera. You can't afford to make mistakes."

The film music, too, ended in a certain regret. The triumphs of the Olivier collaboration were followed in the Sixties by an invitation to write the music for the Battle of Britain. United Artists complained that what he wrote was not long enough they had their eye on publishing an LP, and Walton had turned in just 20 minutes of music. In the ensuing disagreement. Walton swore he would write nothing more for the screen.

Yet it would be wrong to emphasize the disappointments. Walton is much-loved and much-feted, not only in England, but in America where the leading orchestras commissioned for him the sort of music that he most loved writing: brilliant, sharp, virtu-oso pieces ideal for the sounds of those orchestras. All composers rely to a certain extent on their supporters and musical interpreters: in the Twenties and Thirties Walton found Paul Hindemith and Lionel Tertis (who first rejected as un-playable the Viola Concerto), as well as Heifetz; in the Fifties, Piatigorsky.

More recently, after a period when Walton's post-war music has seemed eclipsed by the splendour and bravura of his earlier work, he has had the fortune to have his music performed by Andre Previn, Mstislav Rostropovich (for whom he has just written a new cello piece), Leonard Bernstein and many other modern musicians who do not just love his work but produce it with the vitality it demands. It was George Czell, the conductor, who was largely responsible for drawing attention to the somewhat neglected Second Symphony.

It is this exceptional musical energy, its passionate exuber-ance, what Laurence Olivier once called its "gutsiness" that so puzzles those who meet the man who composes it.

When he talks, he stays behind a curtain of selfdeprecation, peering out as if he viewed all that goes on with amused tolerance. He does not talk about music. He talks about gardening. Even his conducting is restrained: amiable, conscientious, without frills. "You have to look", said one of his friends, "not at William but at his music if you really want to know who is

When Walton lived with the. Sitwells he felt the need to prove the label of genius they had stuck on the pale Lanca shire boy Sachie had be-friended. Today, say those who know him well, he still has curiously little sense of his own achievement, taking great pains with his composition, correcting again and again, but unwilling once it is completed to battle on its behalf. He is a mild and modest man and not one of the many honours that have come his way seems to have ruffled that sense of amused surprise at the sheer luckiness of life.

Can the RAF shut that open window?

If the Russians were thinking of attacking the West they could do worse than choose the end of this year or the beginning of next when a home-built "window of vulnerability" is opening in the skies above Europe in general and Britain in particular. By then the number of aircraft in the RAF's front line will have fallen by 80 -or by more than 100 when compared with the strengths planned only three years ago.

The cause of the air gap is the RAF's biggest re-equipment programme since the 1930s, which will see the multi-role Tornado replacing, ultimately, five more venerable types. But the reason why the gap is not being plugged in advance is largely financial.

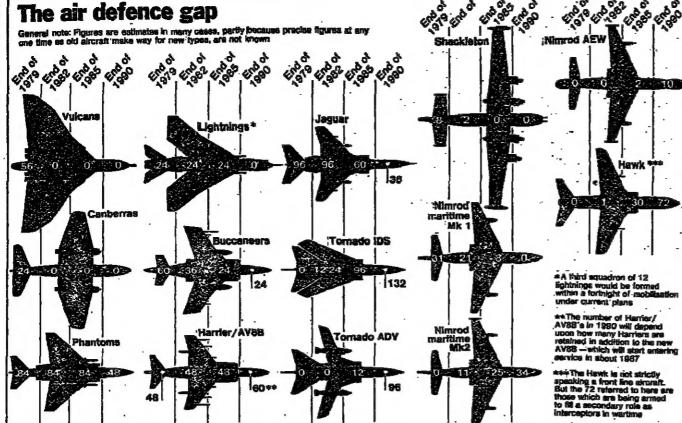

Air staff at the Ministry of Defence realized as long ago as 1978 that there would not be enough air crews to enable a simultaneous phasing-in and phasing-out in its combat squadrons. Instructors for both flying and weapon training would have to be taught all the Tornado's tricks before pilots and navigators could start intensive conversion courses on the new machine.

This is mainly the fault of the Macmillan Government which decided in the 1957 White Paper that the next war would probably be fought with long range nuclear missiles and that the strength of the conventional RAF, with its manned air-craft squadrons patrolling the skies above Britain, could be safely run down.

when the alliance switched to the present doctrine of "flexible response" following the Soviet build-up in nuclear weapons, there was an obvichronic shortage of aircraft, ous need to build up the particularly fighters and in-depleted squadrons once terceptors, for the last 20 again. The Soviet Union has about 450 long-range bombers which the RAF believe could be targeted on Britain in wartime. For the last 20 years or so the RAF has had fewer than 100 fighters and interceptors to threat. Clarke clearly hopes for an even more vigorous literary row over the new selection. It will not be all youthful impetuosity, though. The qualifying age for a Young Novelist is set at 45.

El Salvador is a small, far though a prickly one on both away country of which we know little. It is barely 8,000 square miles large, with a population of four and a half million. It is not a place which is used to the clash of great issues. It has not lived much in the eye of history. On the contrary, it has muddled along with its neighbours little dictatorships ruled by one junta or another in that part of the world which deservedly gave us the expression "banana repub-

Why therefore has its election I yesterday caused such widespress interest world? The choice before the Salvadorean electors is a choice between the extreme right and the less extreme right. In a Central American context the only thing note-worthy about that is that there is any choice at all. It would seem incon-siderate, therefore, of United States policy makers to expose their global power and reputation to the whims of Salvadorean ballots and the bullets which accompany them. Yet that is what seems to have happened. The Ameri-can obsession with El Salvador; has been portrayed as a spannic reaction against any apparent threat of communism by a President from the from the hip. There is clearly more to it than that.

Rightly or wrongly the United States view of the Salvador election, and all developments in Central Arrestice. America, has global conse-quences for us all. The key to atfultimately lies in Washington's relationship with Mexico, It is a complicated, difficult relationship, covering energy, water, frontier disputes, uncontrollable immi- lack of conviction in Washinggration and a whole history of ton that the Mexicans really side. So many Mexican immigrants have come to the United States - legally and illegally - that there are large areas of the West and South West which contain local Mexican majorities. Mexico is thus crucially important to the United States both for domestic reasons and for geopolitical ones. In a geopol-tical sense it is truly Washington's backyard.

So there is in the United States a general and understandable strategic preoccupation with Mexico. There is a concern at the dreadful consequences should relationship sour to the point where Mexico could be considered permanently hostile to the United States as Cuba is. For any president - not just a man of President Reagan's hue those circum-stances would mean that the enemy was truly at the gate. It has been the Administration's view that the subversion of Central America by the Soviet Union out of Cuba has this long-term objective in mind. And why not? Any sensible strategist in the Kremlin, beset by the problems of China, Afghanistan, Iran and Poland, would be tempted to ease the burden by applying some of the same medicine to the United States in its own most sensitive sphere of interest. However, the danger for the United States lies in its reluctance to accept that the Mexicans are not just part of the process to detoxify Cen-tral America of these elements. They are central to it. The initial American reaction to Mexican involvement in peace-making diplomacy was cool, but it has improved since then in spite of a basic themselves, since their own contribution to the stability of the Caribbean basin must, to be successful, be a spontaneous one and not just resentful and reluctant acquiescence to pressure from the United States.

The strategic danger of a fallen Mexico should be obvious to all Europeans. Washington's preoccupation with such circumstances would gravely weaken the American will and ability to maintain its commitment to European defence. The con-nexion between El Salvador and Mexico may well be arguable within the United States and between the United States and Mexico. The domino theory always is arguable. It was argued forcefully throughout the Vietnam war, and discounted. Yet history has vindicated it there. It is argued again now in Central America, and can only be seriously discounted if the Mexican relationship with Washington remains strong enough to withstand any domino effect from their less reputable neighbours in the

From Europe it is not munitions which are needed, but moral support, and a greater measure of understanding of the fears which drive American policy makers to defend what are apparently indefensible regimes in their own backyard. West Europe should show that understanding by taking the initiative to share the burden of Western defence elsewhere in the world outside the Nato area as well as within it. The United States might then feel less isolated in its concern about Central America; and therefore less jumpy. There is no point in criticising Mr. Reagan for being a man who fires missed opportunities and see the danger as vividly as from the hip, if that criticism missinderstandings. It is, in a they should That must surely itself is just another shot sense, a domestic relationship be left to the Mexicans from another hip.

our neighbours regarded us as dangerous subversives. Among the Commons humor-ists I should include a disc of a wind-up speech by Oliver Stanley, a scion of the Derby family. When he had 25 minutes to play with, he would spend the opening 20 charmingly teasing the Labou government, with not a hint of malice. Then he would reluctantly spend five minutes dealing with a Bill that laid an axe at the roots of everything be believed in. He was the supreme political amateur. But the master humorist was Alan Herbert, until university seats were abolished. He was, of course, a member of the Punch table, and it humiliates me to confess I once spent 45 minutes in the press gallery weeping with laughter as he toured the world discussing beer, and entirely forgot to take a shorthand note.

Another disc would go to Leslie Hale, a solicitor and now a Labour peer. (May he soon be well enough to be back in his seat). Called up in the Army, he had proved to be an unmanageable barrackroom lawyer, and in a defence debate in the late 1940s he delivered off the cuff the most brilliantly funny speech I ever heard in the Chamber about the deductions the Army made from the shilling a day it paid its conscripts. Where the wits and humorists of politics have vanished to in recent years must be anybody's guess. Perhaps they are now members of the new school of sketch writers in the press gallery. At any rate, if I must be portentous on this occasion, their absence from debate is the saddest change that has occurred since I first began reporting Westminster politics, and that fact does something to ease passing into retirement.

The House of Commons takes itself too seriously by half, and has forgotten that the best weapon in the political armoury is still laughter.

Sir, The recent glut in oil production, which has led to lowered oil prices and threatens the stability of Opec, has been welcomed, albeit cautiously, by Western oil consumers. A 55 fall in world crude oil price should lead to an increase in industrial production in the West of 1 per cent and a slightly smaller rise in GDP (gross domestic product). The United Kingdom position as both producer and consumer oil is less clear but will probably be marginally favourable, although not as favourable as for Germany, France and Japan. What should happen now is that a depletion policy for the North Sea be defined and clari-fied to cope with periods of over-production. This might be difficult as the Oil and Gas (Enterprise) Bill is speeding through Parliament, helped by the guillo-tine. One could hardly have chosen a worse time to sell off BNOC (British National Oil Corporation) and it will be a test statesmanship of the Secretary of State for Energy whether or not he calls a halt to the process, for the time being at least.

What is particularly sad but predictable is that the latest short-term hiccough in oil prices has already triggered the re-sponse that research into alternatives to oil can be slowed or even halted. This response is encouraged by the continuing absence of any long-term government policy guideline on energy policy. Indeed, confidence in our energy future is repeatedly undermined by an endemic lack of confidence in our own technology.

The latest manifestation of this is the impending PWR (pressurized water reactor) inquiry at Sizewell, due to take place next year. We have looked back nervously over our shoulders for 25 years at American nuclear technology, wondering whether to change to it, unlike the decision is to be made by a distant, albeit well wishing, ally. The operational qualities of Trident D-5 have been extensively discussed and the role of weapons systems in maintaining the technical credibility of Britain's independent deterrent is obvious.

Whether or not the United States is prepared to risk nuclear destruction for it, the survival of an independent Britain and Western Europe is clearly in its The effectiveness of a deternational interest. If an independent British and, for that matter, French nuclear deterrent by the aggressor's perception of 1, the potential enemy's technical competence to hit some key targets, and 2, his willingness to its independence virtue of solidly credible, then it is likely to deter aggression and, to that extent, operates very directly in the national interest of the United States. The decision to invest in Trident D-5 really poses two quite different issues: 1, will future British governments be willing to use or threaten to use deterrent; if not, why make the investment?; and 2, will future British governments be willing to use the deterrent in defence of Western Europe; if not, can Britain really expect to retain its independence with all of Europe under Russian control? The answer to the second question is almost certainly France's independent deterrent, and it is interesting to note the great extent to which France's ability to act independently is in the British national interest. What all of this shows is that a nation is most secure when its allies are prepared to accept ultimate responsibility for their own defence. Mr Correlli Barnett seems to miss this point and it is crucial. Yours sincerely,

Cable controversy and freedom

From Dr Andrew Demopoulos Sir, It would be a pity if the current enthusiasm for a system of cabled transmission of inforniation were to cause us to lose sight of the need to preserve to the maximum possible extent the freedom of the individual to obtain (with dish aerials, etc) direct wireless access to satellite transmissions of the

A cabled system offers variety and good quality of reception, in addition to the possibility of twoway communication, It is, how-ever, characterized by the fact that input to it is restricted by the ground rules of the cabled country: these can lay down not only what kind of subject matter may be transmitted but also some vardsticks as to minimum stan-

This, I believe, will be no bad thing. National standards developed, and to set a clear and realistic coal production target for the Coal Board instead of having two sets of figures for dards, however admirable, are never entirely free of some coal production post-2000, one the Department of Energy's and a degree of parochialism. are, on balance, worth taking.

If freedom of wireless access were to be made (or remain) the general rule, for many people the neatness and convenience of cable will still make this their first choice. There would, how-ever, be few justifications for the coding or scrambling of wireless transmissions: copyright of confi-dentiality would probably be the main exceptions to the rule.

Yours faithfully, ANDREW DEMOPOULOS, Faculty of Law, The University, Southampton. March 23.

From Mr Peter M. A. Cooke Sir, There seems little doubt, vour leading article today (March 23) suggests, that cable television is to be the latest bandwagon. In your apparently unrestrained enthusiasm for the coming plethora of channels, you make two claims which deserve closer consideration.

Pirst, you say "the consumer need is there", though this claim is squeezed somewhat coyly between statements of the availability of the money and the technology. Is it? What evidence do you adduce? Or is the cable proposal yet another example of that ubiquitous philosophy — if it can be done, it should be done? Secondly, you say, "Nor is

Secondly, you say, "Nor is there any reason to believe that there any reason to believe that strict control of programme content ("contact" was in fact printed!) is necessary when the viewer will have such a multitude of choices before him."

Given the intrusive nature of television as a medium, and its ready availability to all including the very young, I find this claim quite incredible. One is forced to ponder the social impact of the potential explosion of readily-available "entertainment".

Ever greater lassitude; ever less discrimination; ever less care and concern; ever less social contact. Surely the penetration of this pervasive medium of visual communication and the concur-rent decline in standards of social and moral behaviour cannot continue indefinitely to be attributed to chance.

However, perhaps it is thought that there are minor drawbacks to so effective an opiate of the masses; 1984 is now indeed close. Yours faithfully, PETER M. A. COOKE,

Whither the GLC?

From Lord Plummer of St Marylebone

Sir, Anthony Grant, MP, is mistaken, in his letter of March 23, in assuming that in 1967 the newly elected Conservative GLC "were mesmerised" into taking over London Transport by the offer by Mrs Barbara Castle to write off its debts. He was not involved in the negotiations and may not be aware of the facts.

In 1967 the Government informed the GLC that either they could take over responsi-bility for overall policy and financial control of London port Authority would be set up.

The prospect of another unaccountable and remote authority similar to the ILEA, with power to precept on the rate-payer, was considered unaccept-able and we entered into nego-tiations with the Minister of Transport. The Government first offered a 66% per cent write-off of the board's capital debt, but after protracted arguments they eventually agreed in 1969 to introduce further legislation to allow this to be increased to 100 per cent.

With the assent of the Leader of the Opposition we then agreed to proceed, having also obtained an undertaking from the Govern-ment that they would deal with such major issues as the law, new techniques and administrative procedures to control traffic and parking.

We were well aware of the heavy responsibility and one of our objectives was to achieve a closer correspondence between those enjoying transport services and those paying for them, and the Government considered we were competent to hold that responsibility. Yours faithfully, PLUMMER, Leader of the GLC, 1967-73, House of Lords.

From Mr John Martin Sir, When London Transport lowered fares six months ago it was reported that its staff would be receiving a wage rise to compensate for the reduction in value of their free travel Fares have now doubled, so presumably this will be taken into account during the current negotiations for a wage increase? On balance it may well be that the greatly enhanced value of the free travel perquisite could mean that no actual wage rise can be justified

Ulster Assembly plan

From Mr Boyd Black Sir, There is an alternative to Mr "concoction" would receive widespread support and "cross-community endorse-ment" in Northern Ireland. It is to govern Northern Ireland on the same basis as Scotland.

The overwhelming majority (88 10 Athol Street, Belfast.

per cent) of the Protestants polled found it acceptable, while the Catholics polled were evenly divided, 45 per cent finding it acceptable, 45 per cent opposed and 10 per cent don't knows. The overall figure of 74 per cent finding it acceptable (which doesn't include the don't knows) was well above the 70 per cent weighted majority Mr Prior wants in his proposed Assembly and higher than that for any other option. In the interests of stability, the Government should seek to broaden the widespread assent which already exists for the "Scotland option" rather than proceed with its ill-fated initiatīve.

The Report is made possible by a shared understand-ing of the nature of the Church as a universal com-munion of which the eucharist is the effectual sign, the episcopate the bond, and the primacy of the Pope its visible link and focus. The main body of new text is concerned with the small print of primacy: Petrine texts, divine law, jurisdiction and 'infallibility'. There is no straight line from "Thou art Peter..." to specifically Roman primacy, But among Roman primacy, But among the entire episcopate through whose due succession the ministry of the apostles in and to the Church is continued, there can be one primate whose special service to the unity and catholicity of all the churches is analonly to God. The very word tends to bemuse the mind when one is asking how the Church is maintained in the truth under the word of God. A primary responsibility of every bishop is to proclaim the gospel, to safeguard authenticity in the teaching proclaimed in his diocese, and to keep charity and unity among his people. If by God's will, for the preservation of unity and catholicity, there is a primate whose calling and gift is to be something of what St Peter was to the first Christians, then he will have a wider responsibility and teaching office, exercised always in communion with his brother bishops in the churches. When the bishop of the church of St Peter and St Paul gives a verdict on faith and morals, where he is not speaking casually or in other than a judicial capacity but is articulating the essential faith of the universal Church, where his ruling is not in his capacity as diocesan of Rome but as chief shepherd of all, and where he is not under external duress, then Roman Catholics believe that he is assisted by the Spirit of God. But this assistance is not that of an oracle. It is an affirmation of faith that when the rigorous conditions are fulfilled, he is preserved from error. No more, no less. Behind the language of the ARCIC report there lies an elusive question: is the gift of divine assistance to guide reliably and to be kept from "Infallibility" is ambiguous. It applies unconditionally large which ARCIC does not use) guaranteed a priori? Or is it through the reception of the faithful that the authority of the definition or decision becomes manifest? This problem lies close to the heart of the issue between Rome and Canterbury concerning teaching authority. But Roman Catholics are in no way committed to the view that it is simply the Pope himself who decides when a decision has universal and definitive status. Anglicans do not hold that reception by the people of God is that which first imparts authority to a definition. So the gap is not wide.

There will be hesitation whether ARCIC's agreement on teaching authority in-cludes "infallibility" or not. The guaranteed a priori, from which Anglicans dissociate themselves if it means "apart from the faith of the people of God and irrespective of their reception", is not language in which Roman Catholics recognize an accurate description of their position. It is unclear where lines of disagreement are drawn but the positive agree-ment is clear: there is a Petrine focus which is served by the universal primate, and if so it inheres in his office that he has both teaching responsibility and the char-isma to enable him for it.

In Beuys's theory of sculpture felt and fat, signifying warmth, fluidity, the creative imagination and life itself, are opposed to the right-angled, crystalline principles of rational thought which, unless they are warmed by the imagination (as Beuys's iron rods are warmed, by the felt in which they are wrapped) are cold as death. are wrapped) are cold as death. personality. "Everyone can be an artist; this is my favourite slogan," he says. "All life is art." His clothes, the wide-brimmed felt hat, the rubber-soled shoes and the sleeveless huntsman's waistcoat, which he has worn constantly throughout his career, make him an icon.

His most resonant works have been "actions" in which he himself is his own medium. In 1965, on the occasion of his first public exhibition, he spent three hours explaining his art to a dead hare. His head covered in honey and gold leaf, he murmured inaudibly while the public watched through the windows. In 1974 he was carried on a stretcher to Rene Block's New York gallery where he spent a week in a cage with a wild coyote.

These actions, recorded in these actions, recurred the haunting photographs by Ute Klophaus, have a poetic intensity greatly enhanced by Beuys's own personal magnetism. "I am a personal magnetism. Opera: John Higgins, in Paris, reviews Kiri Te Kanawa's first Tosca

All credit to the singers

Over the past year Jean Claude Auvray has emerged as one of the most inventive of the new generation of French opera producers. Stagings as diverse in style as the classical vision of Rossini's Tancredi at Aix last summer and the later Rigolet-to at Basle with its East Side mobsters bear testimony to that. So perhaps Tosca was an odd choice for Auvray's first production at the Paris Opera, the bouse where he worked on the staff for a number of years. Puccini's drama and ample invention have rarely walked comfortably hand in hand. Auvray confronted Tosca with one distinct advantage.

Two of his principal colleagues came completely fresh to the work: Seiji Ozawa had to the work: Seif Ozawa had not conducted the opera previously and Kiri Te Kanawa was taking on the title role for the first time. At least there should have been few preconceived ideas in those quarters. Elsewhere there were one or two there were one or two obstacles. Yves Saint Laurent, who was chosen to design the clothes, withdrew some time ago. Then Jose Carreras, the highly experienced Cavaradossi who was to sing the opening perform-ances, cancelled shortly before the first night. But, even more secious. Auvray has encumbered himself with the ugliest assembly of sets to have disfigured Tosca for some time. They are the work of Jean-Paul Chambas, who designed a perfectly decent Hoffmann for Florence the Christmas before last but who, in Paris, seems determined to put the skids. under Puccini. Yet, despite offences to the eye, Auvray's view of Tosca, cogent and provocative, is still both visible and audible. It is that the opera from first to last is a tragedy. Tosca and Cavaradossi, and so the audience, know they are unlikely to see that casetta, the love-nest they look forward to in the first act. The roll of percussion as the curtain falls on Act II comes from off-stage and it is a death rattle, not for Scarpia who lies dead on the floor but for Cavaradossi who will be shot in the morning and telling stroke and one to alert anyone in the audience not quite clear about the story.

Auvray throughout concentrates on his three princi-pals. The first act is set in one of the unfinished side-chapels of Sant' Andrea della Valle, where the plaster seems still wet on the walls. It is used as a vestry rather than for praying and the nuns arrive with the freshly-laundered surplices to tobe the choirboys before the day's Te Deum. It brings Cavaradossi and Tosca right up against the audience.

Kiri Te Kanawa, in a flowing yellow summer robe, makes a marvellous entrance. Her eyes dart around the church: piety demands that the statue of the madonna gets first attention with the bouquet of flowers, but then jealousy takes over rapidly as painting. The second of her impractical marble table, Tosca are today and onlimpressive; the chapel walls ladies, which stretches alwednesday and April 3†, 5, split open to reveal the nave most the length of the stage. 9†, 12†, 16†, 20†, 24† and of the church as converted. of the church - a somewhat The door of the torture cardboardy structure — with chamber is spattered with a square of sunlight at the dried blood, something Puc-

She clearly inspired her Cavaradossi, Eruesto Veronelli, to give of his best. His upper register has a burnished clarity, but there is a certain rawness in the voice and, I suspect, not much support at the bottom. Nonetheless, Veronelli looks well in profile and there was a vigour in his performance which matches Ingvar. Wixell's vocally heavyweight Scarpia, not exactly a subtle interpretation but one which exudes green of every kind.

Jean-Paul Chambas provided him with an improbable of the curtain on the first night with the house apparently divided just about evenly between boos and countercheers for the production team and for Seiji Ozawa, who took a long time to secure the right orchestral tension. But musical politics in Paris are so byzantine that the targets of derision are not always identifiable. For the singers there was nothing but praise, especially for Kiri. Te, Kanawa. Jean-Claude Auvray has made some visual errors, but from his soprano vided him with an improbable errors, but from his soprano he has secured an outstanding performance.

Tosca are today and on-Wednesday and April 3 , 5, 9 , 12 , 16 , 20 , 24 ; and 27. The opera returns to the repertory at the end of July with cast changes. Kiri Te Kanawa is scheduled to sing

Television A life of language

"Have you always been virgo intacta from the word go?" "Go?" Few words are allowed to escape undetected in The Hothouse (BBC 2), Harold Pinter's early mannerist comedy, and many are ner-vously examined for signs of fraud like coins at an assay.

Tiny maddening cadenzas are performed on individual examples — feminine, inti-mate, convalescence, del-egate, rest — and at the very end a most un-Pinterly expla-nation is offered for what has taken place: the patients have murdered the entire staff of the psychiatric hospi-tal save one because the director has made Patient 6,459 pregnant and murdered Patient 6,457.

An explanation is about as necessary as a cuckoo's egg at the end of a play like this, for what matters is not the puppet-people inside it but the life of the language they use and the sight of a young playwright trying out theatritechniques and conventions like new toys from a deep box: pantomime, musical, thriller, etc, alternate with one another in a sequence of loosely connected routines that is often entertaining if nowhere near as ominous as we are, from time to time, told.

Louis Marks's production held the attention more or less throughout. Derek Newark had the toughest job to scale down the choleric director for the small screen, so was often wonderfully obtuse; Angela Pleasence obtuse; Angela Pleasence gave her unique and compeling impression of a Bisto Kid escaped from a detention centre; and best of all was James Grant as the one member of staff who escaped the massacre — civil, obedient, cruel and unsleeping, the snake in the nest.

Something has happened to clowns since I used to dread their angry, red and che-quered incursions into the audience between animal acts audience between animal acts at the circus. They have become gentler and, like conductors of symphony orchestras, very young. Soupy background arrangements of Sondheim, Pagliacci and The Pirate gave a somewhat soft centre to There Ought to be Clowns, made for Open Door (BBC 2) by Clown Cavalcade, but the purpose of the programme purpose of the programme the need for a National Centre for Clowning and Comedy, part museum, part training centre, part per-formance area — was a splendid one: the Covent Garden area would be ideal.

It is possible to evoke the great performers of the past

Johnny Dennis of the Players Theatre did a delicious Dan Leno suggesting that the living link between The Funniest Man on Earth, who died at 43 and whose funeral crowd stretched three miles from Brixton to Tooting, is Arthur Askey, and there is no more moving speech from the stage than that of Grimaldi's farewell. Clown Cavalcade were seen doing lively work before kids in Southwark although I still sympathize with the little girl in the red dress who put her fingers in her ears while continuing to smile very politely at the racket all

The law of diminishing returns with whom he has been associated — above all, John associated — aboye all, John Cage — is that there is no tradition behind it. Yet a piece such as The Viola in My Life IV could, I think, only have been written comparatively late in its century. What Sir Charles Mackerras conducted at his concert with the English Chamber Orchestra on Friday, with a repeat last night, could be called pictures at another exhibition. Dull end for equities

The equity market ended the financial year on a dull note. It fell from $72.0 at the beginning of February to last Friday's close of $57.7, a net 14.9 compared with the 60.95 rise in January. The Budget made no impact with the exception of sectors such as construction. In gifts, however, where attention was focussed on index-linked issues open to everyone, the Gilts Index rose in February from 64.65 to 68.69.

Spending by the Government on goods and services, has greatly outstripped that by local authorities, according to a briefing published today by Wood Mackenzie, the stockbrokers. This shows that council spending after adjusting for inflation, fell by more than 2 per cent between 1979 and 1981 while central government spending rose by 7.5 per cent. The biggest increases were in defence and the National Health Service. Next year, central government spending would rise by 8.5 per cent, twice as fast as that by councils.

Professional and executive staff salary increases will be cut to between 6 and 8 per cent in the next 12 months but should rise by more than the rate of inflation in the 1983 pay round because of increased productivity, according to a report by Reward Regional Surveys. The average for the next 12 months will disguise increases of more than 15 per cent for scarce staff such as high-technology engineers.

Gatt chief spells out danger in barriers

By Melvyn Westlake

A warning that mouting second half of the 1970s and trade protectionism round the world is endangering representative democracy and opening the way to Mussolini-style corporatism, has come from the top economist at the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Mr Jan Tumlir, who is regarded as the driving intellectual force at Gatt, also fears that the November's ministerial meeting on trade will do little to halt the slide to protectionism.

The meeting, the first of its type for almost a decade, has been seen as the best hope for forging a new commitment among nations to the principles of an open-

The Commission's recommendation was quickly approved by Mrs Sally Oppenheim then Minister of State for Consumer Affairs, and the poster business has been trying to work out how to replace it ever since. British Posters accounted for 25 per cent of the total roadside advertising revenue,

Bank worried by growth in lending

Bank lending to companies inroads made by the banks and households soured to record levels in the latest three-month period ending in February,, according to Bank of England figures today.

The rise in bank lending in sterling to the private sector was £4,660m, taking seasonal factors into account, equivalent to an annual growth rate of about 30 per cent.

In present conditions, this

When the European Community agreed a week ago to sign the treaty for the sixth International Tin Agreement the chances of the pact coming into effect were greatly increased. The paradox is that the Bill has so far received a dis-tinctly cool response from the very private sector com-panies which could be expected to benefit most from the ending of the monopoly — and which indeed have long pressed for the market to be opened up in the way The diplomatic pressure is mounting on the Eastern block to join, Although the Soviet Union have companies, which now have the opportunity to develop offshore gas worth thou-sands of millions of pounds which they claim has had to be left in the ground until now as a result of the refusal of British Gas to pay a decent price for supplies.

State for Energy: the governnent's Bill has so far received a cool response from private companies Some industrialists doubt if it will have any significant impact for at least whether switching from dealing with British Gas to a combination of large interbigger than it looks, since British Gas, with the support of the government, has consistently confined its sales to what it calls "prenational oil companies will be anything other than jumping out of the frying pan into the mium" uses, those for which gas, as a relatively clean and flexible fuel, is particularly fire. They are also not convinced that it will mean lower gas prices. What has gone wrong? The reality is that there is a ready market for private sector gas, market for private and large reserves of gas offshore available to be developed to meet this demand. But there are enormous problems of logistics and of price to be overcome before the two can be matched up, and it is not clear whether the government has done enough — or really has the political will — to ensure that they are.

The existing market for industrial gas is already big business. In the 1980/81 financial year, British Gas's sales to industry amounted to 5,859m therms, worth £1100m. Sales to hotels, schools and other so-called commercial users, a few of which could possibly be interested in private gas deals, accounted for another 2,147m therms worth £561 m.

larly since the government has decreed that any gas fields found since 1975 must bear the same onerous taxes as North Sea oil discoveries. This means an average tax take over the life of the field of about 75 per cent. Before they can justify spending £500 to £600m on developing a new field, they must be reasonably sure that

Specifically this covers general industrial processing, but excludes steam raising and bulk heating, for which mundane purposes coal and oil are just as good. The argument behind this policy is that it is wasteful to use finite supplies of gas for purposes for which other fuels are readily available.

prepared to let the oil companies into the non-premarket, it would be more interested in private gas sales. Whether the government is prepared to go this far is not clear.

But it is price that is at the centre of the oil industry's reservations about the new gas proposals. BP and other leading North Sea companies say publicly that they need a 2,147m therms worth £561 m.

It has recently offered as much as 190 a therm for supplies from the North Sea, and already pays nearly that much for the 30 per cent of its gas needs which it imports from Nor-

Since it is effectively obliged by statute to supply gas to any household that wants it, the state corporation is going to have to be more generous still in years to come if it is to get the supplies it needs. The impli-cation of all this has not been lost on industrial gas consumers: private competition or not, their gas bills are going to get more expensive whatever happens.

That is why the industry has told Mr Lawson that probably the only way to make his legislation work is Given that the oil compa-nies will have to band together to produce enough gas to meet such industrial demand as they get, the fear of many consumers is that their future suppliers will be just as tough a nut to crack as British Gas. On top of that, the oil companies: with only one or two fields at their disposal, will find it difficult to provide the uninterruptible supplies that British Gas, with its control of the whole network, offers many of its customers now. It does not add up to quite the rosy picture that many private sector firms originally hoped for.

The oil companies say they

British Gas pays an average of about 7 to 8p a therm for the gas, and sells it to industry at between 25 and are unlikely, under the present Bill, to gain more than 20 per cent of the industrial gas market, and that not until the 1990s. Government officials concede 30p a therm, making a handsome profit (£700m on a historic cost basis last year) that that there will be no major impact for several years, but say this is not surprising. # Could a banking crisis happen again?

Greed and fear have not sine qua non for official been abolished from the approval. financial community (or the hearts of men) since the secondary banking crisis of 1973/75. There is a saying in the City that past successes are remembered and failures forgotten, and Margaret Reid's book on the crisis, excerpts of which appeared in The Times last week, is a timely warning to new generation of bankers. But could the events of the middle seventies reoccur, and in a much darker form? Just this month the deputy governor of the Bank of England sounded a strong warning to banks to be more careful in their international lending at a time when British banks have loaned more than £1,000m to Poland; and Sir Freddie Laker has gone bankrupt owing over £200m to Western banks. Again, bankers have met much criticism for keeping Stone-Platt alive for a year, despite the company's worsening problems, before calling in a receiver.

So banking prudence is being questioned once more. But it is important to realise the conditions under which the property market and the secondary banking sector operated between 1971 and 1975. The government docu-nent Competition and Credit Control opened up a laissez-fair climate in which calculator cowboys, be they property developers or inanciers, believed the pot of gold could never empty. Government and the clearng banks lost a degree of ing banks lost a degree of caution in the estimable pursuit of growth. Accounting standards were haphazard, enabling balance sheets to be "window-dressed" and directors' interests and loans concealed.

All this and more led to the creation of paper pyra-the creation of paper pyramids which were blown down by the tighter credit policies imposd by the Heath Government in the wake of the first oil crisis in the autumn of 1973.

Since the Bank of England launched the secondary bank "lifeboat", there have been several major moves undertaken to ensure there is no repeat of a crisis which threatened the whole structure of British banking at one stage. The Bank of England's own supervisory depart-ment was strengthened, quarterly returns from banks were demanded, with details of the loan book, capital and reserve ratios and contingent liabilities a approval.

The Banking Act 1979 gave the Bank of England's supervisory techniques a legal basis, and a (controbank liquidity, which followed in 1980, is close to producing new prudential requirements.

Accounting standards are still in the long process of being harmonized under the aegis of the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies. The Companies Act 1980 required that loans to directors be disclosed in annual accounts. And a 1975 directive from the Bank of England that banks ought to give priority to industrial and commercial lending instead of the property and financial sectors, has been reinforced several times.

But while strenuous eff-orts have been made to avoid a repetition of 1973 and the British banking sector has been brought under tighter control by the authorities, there will al-ways be risk associated with lending on a massive scale One can perhaps glear some reassurance from the way America has managed to contain the potential institutional crisis that has been threatened from a lengthy period of high interest rates. But the fears undoubtedly remain of the unexpected happening to upset the system. While the international banks have so far been able to handle country rescheduling in a reason-ably orderly fashion, the possibility of, say, a chance combination that saw the collapse of a couple of major multinational companies in quick succession is one that sends the shivers down most bankers' spines.

dollar, strengthened considerably at the end of interest rates remained fair-ly firm and markets took the view that it was better to be in the dolldr than out of it ahead of what is generally expected to be an awkward month for the United States money supply in April, Much of the worry stems from the timing of the large security payments at the start of the month and the way in which these are likely to swell the money supply figures because of the lack of a proper seasonal adjustment. The extent of the "inflation" should become apparent with the figures published on April

Yet both Ipswich goals came from clever diagonal long balls from Caman; the first, after 20 minutes of exploratory stalmate, bounced a swkwardly in the goalmouth and Brazil was allowed a simple chance from five yards; that winning bravura volley from Gates came finally from the head of D'Avray, a 6ft 2m striker from South Africa, who needs more pace before he cam become an adequate substitute for the injured Mariner.

Swangsa's equalizer after 30 minutes was unexpected and controversial. Their right back, Sanley, arched his back for a long throw in and Wark was considered by the referee to have handled as he rode the intentions of Leighton James. Swansea's promising full back, Marustik, was released from the lazger in suport of Curtis down the right and one long-range drive skidded just past Sivell's near post. Curtis nearly confounded the goalkeeper with a clever flick... and there at last was Ray Kennedy pounding down the blind side in his best Anfield style.

Yet, Latchford, who mighthave done something significant in the cauldron, was left on the substitute's bench. Meanwhile loswich still carved out the hetter chances; Muhren was allowed two drives which rattled Dai Davies' Ribs and Gates volleyed hopelessly wide from the same position in which he teed up the winner.

Wark has his work cut out as he tries to dribble round goalkeeper Davies.

Everton not yet come of age

Everton Liverpool...

Liverpool are handily pos-itioned to reach out for the little again, though there are a few awkward obstacles stilt to be negotiated. One which might have impeded them, if for no other reason than that neigh-hours like to keep up with the Joneses, was overcome in an entertaining match with little of the claustrophobis which often afflicts "derby" matches where prestige, real or imagined, is seen to be at stake. to be at stake.

Everton's young side, average age 21, need to add a little more to their store of experience to cope effectively with the likes of Liverpool. They had determination and skills to draw on and there are positive indications of a promising blend evolving.

The resource in midfield of McMahon and Richardson was apparent and in the area up front, where a keen eye and clusive step are essential to success. Sharp and Irvine sug-

A brief prelude to the second half was typical of Merseyside wit. Two fans, clad in the style of jesters and holding aloft a placard with the inscription "Bruce the Clown", awaited Grobbelaar, Liverpool's extrovert goalkeeper in his goalmouth. If it was meant as an impish taunt Grobbelaar responded to it with an incredible care buding an incredible save, hurling himsrif at lightning pace across his line to clutch and hold an equally marvellous shot by Sharp, delivered firercely and unexpectedly on the turn. Liverpool's advances became increasingly threatening but the end came creatly and saw it loop. end came cruelly and saw it loop above and beyond Soutball's desperate reach.

The second half was equally positive. Swain cleared off the line after Talbot's persistent run, and after SS minutes Rix scored again, drifting like thistledown across the face of the Villa penalty area before driving an unstoppable shot past Rimmer.

Another nine minutes and Arsenal had scaled a small Everest with their fourth goal. Davis won a free kick, Hollins put it over, Sunderland backheaded and Meade brought in to provide more attacking punch, Aberdeen breathed new life into the premier division title chase on Saturday to stifle the premature chants of "champions" from Celtic supporters. A 1-0 win over Celtic at Parkhead stretched Aberdeen's unbeaten run to 11 games and cut Celtic's six-point advantage to four. Tottenham ......0

The physical and mental demands of a campaign fought on four fronts are beginning to take their toll on Tottenham Hotspur. their toll on Tottenham Hotspur.

Nine days ago Tottenham who have been contesting the FA, European Gup Winners' and League Cups as well as the First Division championship, tired su badly against Southampton that they ended up clinging to a 3-2 victory after losing a 3-0 lead. On Saturday, after a disappointing goalless draw in midweek at Birmingham City, it was mental fatigue that appeared to be their downfall.

Although allowances had to be downfall.

Although allowances had to be made for the absence through injury of Hoddle, Crooks and Hazard, who could all be fit to face Arsenal tonight, there was an uncharacteristic staleness about Tottenham's game. The midfield, in which even Ardiles looked predictable, had little idea how to prise open West Brom-wich Albion's tight defence and in attack Archibald and Falco hardly had a sniff at goal.

It was notable that a fresh

It was notable that a fresh face, Brooke, who replaced the injured Falco early in the second half, provided the most serious threat as Albion sat back on the lead provided by Regis in the fifty ninth minute.

When there were 50-50 balls to be contested, it was generally Albion who won them. Jock Wallace's young, eager, hard-running Leicester City side will be well equipped to do the same in their FA Cup semi-final against Tottenham on Saturday.

Tottenham have already lost the League Cup and have a tricky European semi-jual in prospect against Barcelooa. With games rather than points in hand in the league, they could join all the league, they could join all the other sides in recent years who have lived to regret their pursuit of so many honours. Saturday's game was Tottenbam's forty sixth of the season, and if they

This match may prove to have been a dress rehearsal for the FA Cup final, but if so it can only be hoped that the full cast will be available to take the Wembley stage. It cried out for someone with the imagination of Hoddle or the invenboursess of Hazard or Statham, who has joined jol and Whitehead on the injured list at Albion, who also have Mackensie suspended.

With the possible exception of Zondervan, Regis was the only player who looked capable of providing any excitement. In one run he left three defenders in his wake before hitting his twenty second goal of the season with a fierce shot, he saw Perryman clear a header off the line. This match may prove to have England's overwhelming victory in the schoolboys international to a cacophony provided by 44,000 young voices at Wembley, furthered the paradox of English football.

English teams have been crushing continental opposition at Wembley, such as the Dutch and West Germans, at this level for some years. Thus far, also such ascendency has not produced dominance at senior level.

Viewed in that context, Saturday's pleasant eighty minutes day's pleasant eighty minutes may be regarded as little more than light relief from the rigours of, the senior League.

But, perhaps, the talented England boys deserve better consideration. After all, they 19

The first signs, however, were not promising. The hordes descended upon the famous old stadium like an ill-distinguished army. Sticks of process were used. army. What followed was a splendid advertisement for the game at any level. Honest, attacking football, plenty of goals, rich entertainment and not a malicious tackle in sight.

Seagraves, the central defender, belied his tender years, in looks and performance. The Dutch, pressured into errors, badly needed a player of his stature to secure uncertain defence. Beckford, a Manchester. City protege, looks a fine prospect for the future as he led the English attack. The goals, most taken crisply and determinedly, arrived in bursts. Carlisle.....

Precisely at the time that one team of dark blues were celebrating their victory on Thames-side, another, Carlisle United, were conceding the goals at Craven Cottage that threatened not only their chances on Saturday but ultimately of getting out of the third division.

Not that Carlisle were setting a precedent. Pleuty before them have wobbled on reaching that top, Fulham included. They, like the visitors, had stuttered towards this fixture only to rediscover the flowing football that had originally taken them to that had originally taken them to that had originally taken them to the leadership.

Could this be the turning point in their promotion drive? someone asked Malcolm Macdonald: "How do I know?" Fulham's surprisingly abrasive manager replied. Maybe he was piqued when told that his opposite number, Bob Stokoe, had had the temerity to suggest that the result had flattered Fulham. Without relying on the big boot, Pulham employed a more direct policy from which they prospered. They also had in Brown a player who did rather

By then it was fairly clear that Carlisle were not, after all going to rally, given the encouragement of the goal flicked in by Robson from Coughlin's corner to reduce Fulham's half time threegoal lead.

The stuffing had really been knocked out of Carlisle in those two minutes midway through the first half when Fulham scored twice. The first came after Rushbury had surprised his goalkeeper with a barkpass which rebounded off him for Tempest to set Davis up for an easy goal. O'Driscoll' then volleyed in from 25 yards. Like Oxford's Boat Race crew Fulham were simply lengths ahead when it came to finishing.

It was Cambridge's only hope — and how they tried. Simon Harris, their stroke, was forced to press the accelerator to the floor. Cambridge led by aimost half a length at the Mile Post and afterwards reached almost three quarters of a length. But Oxford kept their heads and were programmed well.

Aberavon's adventurous style of Bridgend's stubborn defence Bridgend's stubborn derence held firm and since they were surprisingly found to be innocent of any transgressions during this long period of pressure, no penalty opportunities came their way. Abervon, apart from Martin and James at forward, are a young side and whilst their recent successes it was their inexperience on this occasion which contributed to their downfall.

Both Jenkins and Giles preferred to keep the game close to their forwards where Bridgend's defence remained thick and impenetrable. There was a makeshift look about both teams at Welford Road on Saturday, and some of the rugby was makeshift too. Leicester beat Sale by two tries and two pedialty goels to a goal and a try, storing both their tries in the last ten minutes to do so. # Steel was man of iron on an epic occasion

By John Hennessy Golf Correspondent

Donald Steel joined a number of distinguished predecessors by winning his third President's putter, at Rye yesterday. The elect company he now keeps includes such renowned names as Roger. Wethered and Leonard Crawley.

With an 18 year interval between his first win and his third, his record of longerity is surpassed only by that of Crawley, by two years. ### £20,000 double for Waites

Brian Waites, the amazing club professional from Holliwell, near Nottingham, completed a £20,000 African double in Lusaka yesterday by winning the Zambian Open Championship with four strokes to spare over Ken Brown. Waites, one of the veterans of the tournamennt scene at the age of 42, led from start to finish. His victory was worth £12,000, a handsome addition to the £8,000 he won last week in Northern Zambia for victory in the Musulira Open. Waites's second African double came after he had spreadeagled the field with 68s in the first three rounds. He suffered a fright on the tenth hole, a teasing dog-leg of 534 yards, when he bit the ball twice on his pitch to the green, and was penalized two strokes. He survived the incident and calmly continued in 90°F heat.

Brown played one of the best boots of his life to claim outriest.

Webster makes running but his legs give out

By John Wilcockson

With four miles left in yesterday's Essex Trophy — the second event of the 1982 Raleigh Star Trophy series — the race looked to have been won by Darryl Webster, the youngest member of the powerful Manchester Wheelers' team. This 19-year-old Lancastrian had broken tlear on his care 70 willow clear on his own 20 miles earlier and he had successfully negotiated all of the potholed farm tracks that makes this 100 miles classic one of the toughest on the British calendar.

His lead was 22 seconds as he commend from the dust here of the women's little could go to any one of three players; Vicki Cardwell, Lisa Opie or Rhonda Cardwell, Lisa Opie or Rhonda Thorne.

This is the first time both championships have been incorporated into a single tournament, thus transforming the supreme annual festival of British squash into a walled Wimbledon. Of the record prize fund of £35,415, £25,000 will go to the men, £9,180 to the women and £1,235 to subsidiary events, The men's champion will win £4,000 and the women's champion £1,700.

In combining the men's and Gawain Briars, at nine, and Philip Kenyon, at 15, are the only British seeds. The seedings predict the following semi-final record prize fund of £35,415.

£25,000 will go to the men, £9,180 to the women and £1,235 to subsidiary events. The men's champion will win £4,000 and the women's champion £1,700.

In combining the men's and women's championships the organizers may have been fortunate in their timing. Four British women have been seeded to reach the fast eight and Miss Opie could become the first British winner since 1961. The seedings suggest that the final will be contested by two Australians — the holder, Mrs Cardwell, and the world champion, Mrs Thorne — but the final will be contested by two Australians — the holder, Mrs Cardwell, and the world champion, Mrs Thorne — but the final will be contested by british players, Miss Opie and Javne Ashton, at Chichester last week.

Pressure on what well-located offices there are comes from existing Hamburg tenants as well as outside and foreign

The Hamburg property market is looking bouyant, as the slack of previous years is at last being taken up. Agents Jones Lang Wootton, who have been estab-lished in th city for 10 years are cautiously pointing to a scarcity of office accomodation in Hamburg's central business district.

the Hamburg property market collapsed during the mid 1970s although the city was never quite left in the parlous state that other major urban connurbations found themselves in.

During the darkest moments the city's Burgomeisters could only point to 150,000 so metres of empty office accommodation while Frankfurt was saddled

with as much as 500,000 sq

This is partly because, al-though Hamburg is Germany's largest and richest city, it has never witnesed spectacular growth in the office market. With few exceptions it has never enticed the speculative property developer to move within the old walls.

While no one is talking of a boom in the Hamburg commer-cial property market there is a greater air of confidence than

There are signs of a shortage of offices on the nor — too — distant horizon. But there will be a fantastic shortage if the economy picks up and the recession ends".

In some ways it appears the recession has hardly scratched the prosperous surface of Hamburg.

The city has an affluent look,

Covered shopping centres like Hamburger Hof, the Hansa-Vier-tel and Kaufmannshars are full of expensive shops.

There is little doubt that Hamburg has borne the brunt of the recession extremely well and this is mow being reflected on the local office market. Over the nast four years there has been a.

A new chapter in the development of Britain's offshore oil and gas resources will open this Petroleum installs a large production platform on its Magnus field lying 125 miles north-east of Shetland (Peter Hill writes). The 40,000-tonne steel structure, seen ready to leave Nigg Bay, Ross and Cromarty, this week and superimposed, right, on the Thames at Westminster, will create a record for the largest depth and most hostile environment in the North Sea. Magnus is the deepest, largest and most northerly field yet to be developed in European waters, and the project is costing £1,300m. The structure will stand in back. Chiffchaffs sing in the tops of tall trees, some on their way to their breeding territories, some already in them. Wheatears already in them. Wheatears appear on the Downs: they drop off a fence or wall with a flash of their white rumps. Common sandpipers are seen on western coasts, skimming along the water's edge with hesitant, flickering wingbeat. Snipe are "dromming" over the marshes.

610ft of water and has been designed to withstand a combination of waves up to 100ft high and winds of 100 miles an hour. It holds an estimated 565 million barrels of oil.

For many years, this ringing tremolo was thought to be a vocal sound; in fact it is made by the two outer tail-feathers and the quivering wings, as the snipe dives through the air. Blackbirds and hedge-sparrows are begin-ning to build, but eggs are still ning to build, but eggs are still rare.

Weeping willows are green; on the hlackthorn twigs, flowerbuds and leaf-buds sit side by side, waiting to open. Red deadnettles are thick on the ground, dandelion flowers are big and brights. Colts-foot is in full bloom, and its arrow-shaped leaves are now pushing up through the grass. Dock leaves are spreading, dark green around a pale purple centre. In sunny glades and walks, brimstone butterflies career along with fast, unsteady flight: they have just emerged from hibernation among the ivy leaves.
